A famous American artist and musician, Laurie Anderson, once rightly said

"Performance art is about joy, about making something that's so full of kind of a wild joy that you really can't put into words"

It is of utmost importance to nurture the young minds and instill confidence in them, preparing them to face the challenges of the real world. While academic subjects play a crucial role in their education, it is essential to recognize the significant impact of performing arts, such as music and dance, in shaping their overall development. These art forms not only provide a means of relaxation but also encourage students to step out of their comfort zones and explore new horizons. Numerous studies have demonstrated the positive effects of music and dance in reducing anxiety and depression among students. Engaging in these arts allows them to express themselves through soulful melodies, thereby reducing social anxiety and stage fear.

Music, Dance and Theater are not merely extracurricular activities but rather integral components of a well-rounded education.

The Magical Milk

By : Madhu vadhani

Grade -9

In a small village, there was an old cow named Bella who gave the most delicious milk. One morning, when the farmer's daughter, Maya, went to milk Bella, she noticed something strange. The milk was shimmering like tiny stars were trapped inside.

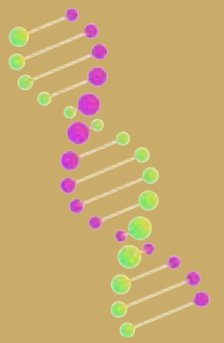

Curious, Maya took a sip. Instantly, she felt light as a feather and filled with joy. The milk made her stronger and happier than ever before. When Maya gave some to her sick mother, she was healed within minutes. Soon, everyone in the village discovered the milk's magical powers. It could cure illnesses, make crops grow faster, and even calm storms.

But Maya knew that the magic was special. She only shared it with those who truly needed it, and Bella, the cow, seemed to know who was worthy of the magical milk. The village thrived, and people were always kind and generous, all thanks to Bella's mysterious gift.

And so, the village lived in peace, always grateful for the magical milk that brought happiness and health to all.

Caring for plants is one of the most fascinating ways to teach preschoolers about the natural world. Our little scientist observed the growth of a plant through Plant Journals. Plant Observation Journal allows our children to document every stage of a plant's life. From sprouting seeds to flourishing foliage, this classroom activity was a great way to foster a love for nature and science. Children examine the seed germinate and see the changes in the roots and leaves as the plant gets bigger. They recorded their observation through visual representation and took the responsibility of watering the plants. This activity taught them the value of responsibility and how to take care of other living things.

They researched and prepared traditional fireless dishes from different continents, such as Africa, Asia, Europe, and the America. Students then shared their dishes with the class, highlighting the unique ingredients, cooking methods, and cultural significance of each dish.
